HON 319: Race and Gender in College Sports

Dr. Tracy Collins

Monday/Wednesday 11:00am-12:15 pm Anspach 256

Interested in exploring how women and minorities are affected by the multibillion-dollar industry known as college sports? This course will explore the many pitfalls and promises of the uniquely American connection between sports and higher education, particularly for minorities and women. Throughout the semester, students will discover the opportunities college sports offers, as well as the radical discrimination and inequalities it creates. Thanks to the interdisciplinary nature of this course, students interested in everything from business or health to politics, gender and race will find field-relevant and engaging questions to tackle in this course. No previous knowledge of college sports is needed.

HON 319SL: Intercultural tutoring

Dr. Alejandra Rengifo

Tuesday/Thursday 2:00-3:15 pm Pearce Hall 332

Interested in learning about the historical, political, and social importance of the Latino community in the U.S., particularly as related to this community's impact on the U.S. economy, culture and how it is shaping the political landscape of the nation? Interested in exploring and identifying the contributions Latinos have made to American social, cultural and artistic production? This course will answer these questions and much more! Spring break will be spent volunteering at the Miami Beach Adult and Community Education Center in Miami Beach. This is an opportunity to experience different Latino communities firsthand as volunteers! A course fee is required for this course (TBD)*.

HON 320: 20th Century Popular Music: A Queer Perspective

Dr. Keith Clifton

Monday/Wednesday/Friday 1:00-1:50 pm Music Building 119

From Little Richard to Freddie Mercury and the Pet Shop Boys to Brandi Carlisle, queer artists and those who experiment with traditional gender roles have been an essential part of the popular music landscape since its origins in the 1950s. We will examine the role of queer artists in the pop music landscape, considering important artists, groups, and bands who challenge accepted norms of gender, sexuality, and subject matter. In addition to rock and roll, the course will consider disco, country pop, dance music, and queer singer-songwriters.

HON 320: Judaism and Anti-Judaism in the United States

Dr. Kelly Murphy

Tuesday/Thursday 2:00-3:15 pm Anspach 167

What is Judaism? Who are Jews? What does it mean to talk about the American Jewish experience? And what role has antisemitism played in the US? "Judaism and Anti-Judaism in the United States" will serve as an introduction to Jewish religious, social, cultural, and political life in the United States with a focus on the diversity of Jewish experience throughout American history. The course will also examine the relationship between American Jews and other Americans, including the causes of and response to anti-Jewish prejudice in the United States.

HON 321AG: The Virtues of Untold Stories

Dr. Hope May

Monday/Wednesday 2:00-3:15 pm Anspach 310

In this interdisciplinary class that combines philosophy, history, and law, we will examine untold and under-told stories of “peace history” through a “virtue theoretic” perspective (as developed by Aristotle). We “enter the forest” by examining specific individuals, in both the United States and Korea, from whom organizations and international normative frameworks emerged. In the case of Korea, we will examine individuals and movements that worked for cosmopolitan and humanitarian values prior to the division of the country in 1945. Students will learn about this history, the virtues of character and the moral energy of individuals that made this history possible, and how the thread of this history extends into the contemporary efforts to realize “Peace Through Law” today.

HON 321AO: Organizing, Planning and Executing a Campus-Community Film Festival

Dr. Patricia Williamson

Wednesday 2:00-3:50 pm Powers Hall 132

This service-focused course is a collaborative event planning effort, working with a variety of stakeholders to organize and execute the 2024 Central Michigan International Film Festival. Students will be undertaking hands on activities in a variety of areas, including event planning, promotions, public relations, fundraising, filmmaker relations, hospitality, and more. Students will be assigned several specific tasks to accomplish both individually and in small groups. Students will need to commit to a minimum of 12 service hours during the five-day festival.
